

Line Tamer Size Information (Feb 6, 2017)

Machine	Template Size	Notes
A1	1/2"
APQS	9/16"	The weld holding the foot to the shaft may interfere with the template. Check by trying any template in back of the foot to see if you have clearance. If it hits, the Line Tamer won't work for quilting horizontal lines. However, APQS is aware of the problem, and you can contact them about a replacement foot.

Domestic Sewing Machines on a Frame

In order to use any template, you need a couple of things:

1. A thick, circular foot that's made to be used with templates. A thin foot, like the darning foot on domestic machines will slide over or under a template and is dangerous to use. There are several feet made specifically to use with templates, if your machine doesn't come with one. The best places to find information are your dealer, or an online forum for your machine or forums for mid- and longarm machines in general.
2. An extension table, to give you a stable surface for the template.

These are some of the add-on feet. Please note that I don't know much about them, and can't make any recommendations. This table is just to help you decide which Line Tamer you need.

Tin Lizzie Ruler Foot	9/16"	tinlizzie18.com/archives/tag/ruler-foot Available for Tin Lizzie, Pfaff Powerquilter and Viking Platinum.
Westalee Ruler Foot	1/2"	www.westalee.com.au/domestic.php Note: The low and medium shank feet may require a thinner template—the 1/4" thick acrylic might not fit. You can test it using two cutting rulers. Put them on top of each other and see if they fit all around the foot. I have some thinner templates. Contact me if interested.

Note: For the feet sold by the various sewing machine companies (Bernina, Janome, etc.) just google the foot. They're generally sold on Amazon and numerous quilt shops.
